Quer durch Kontinente: Wie neue Routen und Technologie den Verkehr zu Lande verbessern

Hall 2, Level +1

Mittwoch, Mai 27, 2015, 11:00 – 12:30

Der Landverkehr zeigt auf einigen neuen transkontinentalen Routen, dass er wettbewerbsfähig ist. Bahnbetreiber bieten Verbindungen zwischen China und Europa an, und eine wiederbelebte Seidenstraße soll Asien und Europa sowie die Märkte dazwischen verbinden.

Als Mittelweg zwischen Luftfracht und Seetransport - was Preis und Geschwindigkeit betrifft - ergänzen diese Optionen den gegenwärtigen Mix der Verkehrsträger, binden Binnenstaaten in globale Lieferketten ein und generieren strategische Investitionen in Logistik-Drehscheiben.

Das Marktpotenzial der neuen Routen ist zwar noch ungewiss, dennoch dürften sie die optimale Funktion der einzelnen Verkehrsträger neu definieren und Auswirkungen auf den See- und Luftverkehr haben. So könnte zum Beispiel der Aufbau einer multimodal en Güterdrehscheibe auf der arabischen Halbinsel Auswirkungen auf alle wichtigen See- und Luftverbindungen zwischen Asien, Europa und Afrika haben.

Vor dem Hintergrund einer erwarteten Vervierfachung des Frachtaufkommens bis 2050 widmet sich dieses Podium der Rolle von Straße und Schiene. Folgende Fragen stehen im Mittelpunkt:

- Welches Potenzial besitzen die neuen Überlandrouten und wie ergänzen sie die übrigen Verkehrsträger?
- In welchen Marktsegmenten sind landbasierte Verkehrsträger günstiger?
- Mit welchen technischen und politischen Hürden sind diese neuen Überlandrouten konfrontiert?
- Wie können Straße und Schiene im Rahmen dieser neuen Routen vernetzt und optimiert werden?
- Welche Umweltfolgen bringen die neuen Überlandrouten und wie kann diese Belastung gemindert werden?
